International Justice Mission

2017 YEAR IN REVIEW
WE ARE
INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE MISSION

WE HAVE SPENT MORE THAN 20 YEARS ON THE FRONT LINES FIGHTING SOME OF THE WORST FORMS OF VIOLENCE.

We work in communities in Africa, Latin America, South Asia and Southeast Asia. Through our unique Justice System Transformation model, we help victims of violence secure justice and partner with key authorities to fix broken justice systems in the countries where we work.

RESCUE
We collaborate with local police to rescue victims from ongoing violence and bring them to safety.

RESTRAIN
We partner with police to restrain criminals, traffickers and slave owners from hurting others.

RESTORE
We join with social workers to restore survivors to safety through counseling, education and skills training.

REPAIR
We identify gaps in the systems that do not protect the poor, and then work with police and courts to address these challenges.

Thousands of children slave away on Lake Volta, a massive man made lake in Ghana. Children as young as three spend up to 18 hour days diving underwater, fishing and untangling nets for their abusive boat masters. Every morning they wake up wondering if they will drown. IJM began operations in Ghana in 2014 to stop that from happening. In 2017, we rescued our 100th child.

Foli* is one of the boys we’ve rescued. His story starts with an innocent childhood. Foli loved playing soccer, kicking the ball with his friends on the dirt fields near his home. Soon, however, Foli was forced to trade the soccer ball for a fishing net.

Foli had been living with his grandparents. One day, his grandfather had an accident that prevented him from being able to watch over Foli. A relative volunteered to take care of him.

He drove Foli to a lake far from home. Instead of offering a safe home, he forced Foli to fish. Foli didn’t even know how to swim. But he did start to understand he could not escape.

Like so many other children on Lake Volta, every day, Foli would dive into the water to untangle nets. He prayed he would not die in the water.

Finally, one day, an unfamiliar boat pulled near his. It carried IJM and local officials and their mission was to rescue children like him.

Foli was brought to an aftercare shelter where he received food, medical care and a soft bed to sleep on. He received counseling to help him process the trauma of being a slave. When Foli finally reunited with his family, joy erupted.

“That day, people were celebrating all over the community because Foli was lost but now was found,” his grandmother said.

Foli is now 17. He’s living with his grandparents and attending school (one of his favourite subjects is religion). Foli is also playing soccer again.

It was the best kind of birth announcement. Bhoomika was Roopa’s third child—but her first one born in freedom. Roopa’s first two pregnancies had occurred while she was a slave.

From when she was 6 to 19, Roopa worked in a south Indian brick kiln, where she endured back-breaking labour, degradation, sexual violence and the heartbreaking loss of a child.

Her first child had died in her womb after an accident in the kiln. The kiln owner had refused to let her go to a hospital.

Her second child was born healthy, partly because her husband, Banaiah, took on her work for her. Banaiah decided to make thousands of bricks by himself every day so Roopa could rest. He had told the kiln owner, “Even if you physically beat me, I will not allow my wife to move a stick...”

Looking into their baby boy’s eyes, the couple decided they no longer could stay in slavery. He deserved a better life. It was time to escape. They knew the risks, but ran into the forest in desperation. Their escape eventually led to a rescue by police and IJM.

For the first time in 13 years, Roopa tasted freedom. IJM helped the family get the food, medical care and shelter they desperately needed.

In June of 2017, they had their third child.

This time, Banaiah’s employer (a small manufacturing plant) gave him a month off to take care of Roopa and his newborn daughter. The couple were free to enjoy holding baby Bhoomika in their arms.

This birth felt so different from the last two. In the best way possible.

Said Banaiah, “I could not contain my joy.”
Nessa* was 16 when she was trapped in a brothel, on an island far from home. Run by an intimidating woman, the brothel was filled with girls who were lined up every evening for a night of abuse. Nessa said all the girls knew that the brothel owner had a gun.

IJM helped police rescue Nessa and 8 other young women on December 4, 2008. In March 2017—more than eight years after rescue—that scary brothel owner pled guilty. She faces 35 years of prison.

IJM persevered with Nessa for those eight years. We stood by her through the disappointments and victories, through delayed trials, judge reassignments and lawyer changes before Nessa heard the verdict.

Nessa’s story of change mirrors a beautiful transformation taking place across her country. In those same eight years, IJM also walked alongside the fragile Philippine justice system and advocated for change. Today, the country has a much stronger anti-trafficking law. In addition, 86% fewer minors are being sold for sex where IJM has worked with authorities.

Nessa’s family, including her son born in 2016, live in a humble but happy home in a country that is now safer for children and women.

She said, “I could compare my life before at the brothel to a withered flower, a tree with falling leaves. However, today I am a colourful blooming flower, in a beautiful garden. I am a bountiful tree with many leaves and branches. All the leaves and branches are the people around me who are continually encouraging me and supporting me. The darkness has passed away, and my life today is colourful.”

Helvia* encountered a man outside of her school; he would drop off his niece there every day. He seemed very friendly at first. He would smile and make small talk with Helvia. This 25-year-old man gained Helvia’s trust. But soon, he took her to an empty lot near the school. For several weeks, he kept taking her to that lot and raped her again and again. Helvia became pregnant. She was only 12.

Not long ago, there was a good chance Helvia’s rapist could get away without consequence. Due to challenges in Guatemala’s forensic labs, courts and police, it was common for criminals to remain in society and possibly hurt even more children.

But not today. With the help of IJM, Guatemala’s justice system has made significant progress over the last decade. And as a result, Helvia’s story turned out very differently.

In January 2017, following three years of work between IJM and the Guatemala government, Helvia’s abuser was convicted and sent to jail for 16 years. Meanwhile, IJM provided care for her and her baby and helped her heal through therapy.

This conviction sent a strong message to everyone involved. To Helvia (and her baby)—that she mattered, that what was done to her was a crime and that she and others like her would be protected. To her rapist—that he could not get away with hurting children and youth. And to Guatemala—that justice for the poorest and most vulnerable among them was not only possible, but will soon be the norm.

Sadhna*, a sex trafficking survivor rescued by IJM, stood before the crowd of world leaders and dignitaries and recounted her story. Some had tears in their eyes as she talked about her journey from the brothel to her new life studying to become a social worker.

This incredible moment showed just how far India had come in recognizing survivors and fighting slavery. It happened during the inaugural International Conference on Women Trafficking in July. Organized by IJM and the Maharashtra State Commission for Women (MSCW), leaders from 13 countries, including the Second Lady of Ghana, weighed in how they could help end human trafficking.

The first conference of its kind in India, it signaled incredible momentum and collaboration on ending trafficking worldwide.

The conference also positioned IJM as a key partner to governments; leaders acknowledged that IJM’s model of transforming justice systems is instrumental in eradicating slavery. Leaders discussed how law enforcement is the missing piece in ending slavery—slave owners and traffickers must know they will be held accountable. Strengthened police, courts and governments are the answer.

MSCW Chairperson Vijaya Rahatkar said, “The desire to bring people from various nations to this conference is not only to see the roots of the issue, but to seek a solution—to set the scene for collaboration on anti-trafficking. This conference can be a new beginning for the cause.”
